

Sick or injured koalas may display the following:

- ◆ Sitting on the ground or low in a tree
- ◆ Staying in the same tree for more than three days
- ◆ Weakness when climbing or walking
- ◆ Skinny or emaciated appearance
- ◆ Bad fur condition such as fur loss, brown patches or scabbing

The female koala on the right at Glastonbury is very sick. She was found recently and the wildlife rescuers were called, but sadly she did not survive.

Conjunctivitis

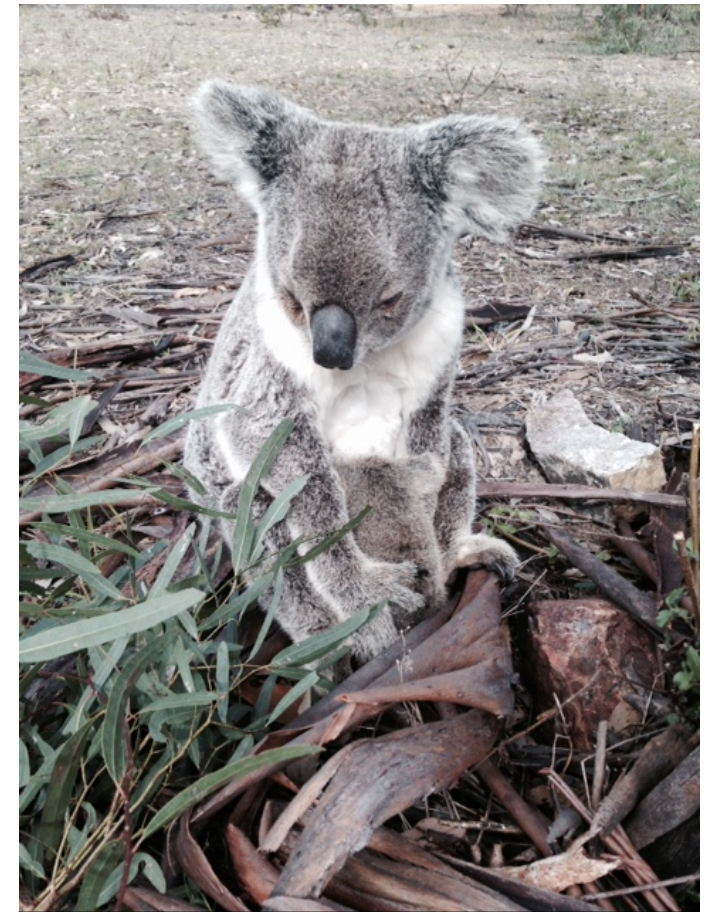

Conjunctivitis affects one or both eyes. Signs include weeping of the eyes, pus covered eyes, and pink swollen eyes.

Eugene below of Tandur went to hospital years ago for treatment for his left eye, but it's not looking too good again. Time to get advice and maybe back to hospital.

Cystitis

Cystitis causes a wet, brown, and smelly bottom. This is also known as "wet tail" or "dirty bum". In the photo below, see the dirty bottom of young Gympie local, Smiley, after a period of drought. She is back from hospital healthy.
